More about this proposal

European Commission Regulation No. 1137/2014 came into force on 17 November 2014. This new EU Regulation amends Annex III of Commission Regulation No. 853/2004 on the handling of certain offal ('stomachs and feet') from animals intended for human consumption. Under this Regulation, when destined for further handling:

Stomachs must be scalded or cleaned; however, in the case of young ruminants intended for rennet production, the stomachs need to only be emptied.

Intestines must be emptied and cleaned.

Heads and feet must be skinned or scalded and depilated; however, when authorised by the competent authority, visibly clean feet may be transported to and skinned or scalded and depilated in the approved establishment that is further handling the feet for processing into food.

The letter linked below outlines proposed arrangements and criteria for applying the amendment under the new EU Regulation.

What area the proposal applies to:

- Animal feed
- Food law, monitoring and controls
- Hygiene and food safety

England, Northern Ireland and Wales
