

Registering as a food business

Guidance on whether you need to register as a food business

Anyone working or volunteering with a food bank or food aid charity should be aware of the information in this guide.

Registering as a food business

You may need to register as a food business if you, or your operation, provide food to the community on a regular and organised basis, even if it's free, 28 days before you start providing food.

We have specific advice on how to register as a food business.

Before regularly providing food to the community, contact your local authority food safety team to discuss registration requirements.

As a food business operator, you need to follow the relevant food safety and hygiene requirements, outlined in this guidance. Registering as a food business means your operation will receive inspections from authorised officers and be given a food hygiene rating, if applicable.

If you only occasionally provide food to the community, you may not need to register as a food business. However, the food you provide should still be safe to eat and we recommend you follow the food safety and hygiene best-practices listed in this guide.

If you are unsure, we have scenarios available to read of community food providers that do or don't need to register as a business.

As a food business operator, your local food safety team can provide further support and advice on matters in this guidance.

We also have food safety and hygiene guidance for hosting or providing food at a community or charity event.