

Survival of SARS-CoV-2 on food surfaces: Aims and Objectives

We conducted a laboratory-based study artificially contaminating infectious SARS-CoV-2 virus onto the surfaces of foods and food packaging. We then measured how the amount of infectious virus, present on those surfaces, declined over time. They were studied at a range of temperatures and humidity levels and over time periods that reflect their typical storage conditions.